ooks like OpenOffice might be near the end of the road, according to an email thread started yesterday by the project's vice president Dennis Hamilton.

The email thread, titled "What would OpenOffice retirement involve?" comes after years of developer attrition. Open source developers have been abandoning OpenOffice in favor of the more popular LibreOffice for a couple years now and it shows. OpenOffice hasn't been updated since October 2015, and project leaders are getting worried about what that might mean for user security.
